An overhead photograph of three children lying on their stomachs on a lush green lawn. They are holding large, circular cutouts of various emojis. The child on the left holds a 'Sweating Face' emoji (😓), the child in the middle holds a 'Smiling Face with Hearts' emoji (😍), and the child on the right holds a 'Surprised Face' emoji (😲). All three children are wearing bright yellow dresses. The text 'WORLD EMOJI DAY 17 JULY' is overlaid in white, bold, sans-serif font on the left side of the image.

WORLD EMOJI DAY 17 JULY

Emoji is a word that originally meant “pictograph” or “icon” and World Emoji Day is a fun way to start a serious conversation with your students about communication. Emojis are the new shorthand, crossing language barriers and have become a useful tool to be able to send abbreviated messages making communications fun and alive.

The history of emojis in their current form can be traced back to the 1990s when Japanese mobile phone operator DoCoMo put a heart inscription on a cheap pager which was an instance success with teenagers. When they introduced an updated pager, they omitted the heart inscription which led to a huge outcry from their customers, many left and joined another pager company who had adopted the heart inscription. In 1999, DoCoMo realised that they were onto something and employed a team to develop 176 pixilated characters to describe the weather, feelings and general day to day images and objects.

By 2007 the Unicode Consortium, a Silicon Valley non-profit organisation, began to standardize emojis so that they would appear the same on all platforms, regardless of what type of phone, computer or website was being used. By 2011, Apple introduced them onto their iPhones and today, 30 years on from their early beginnings, a staggering 5 billion emojis are sent every day on Facebook alone.

Whether you love or hate emojis in professional communications, there’s no doubt they’re becoming more common in the workplace too and as George Orwell once said, “Never use a long word where a short one will do.”
